DEATH OF W.H. EDDINGS

William H. Eddings died at his home in this city Tuesday morning at 3:10 o'clock, his death resulting from an abscess near the base of the brain. Mr. Eddings has been a patient sufferer for a number of years past, being scarcely free from pain during that period. The skill of surgeons availed him only of temporary relief, and he has with great patients and enduring fortitude borne up under a constant strain till the hour of his death. About a week ago his malady took a marked change for the worse, and he took to his bed from which he never arose.

The deceased was 35 years of age and was born and raised in Vancouver, being the son of John and Sarah Eddings, two pioneers of this county. He was a man of an exemplary character and his conduct throughout his life has been above reproach, possessing the confidence of the entire community and highly respected by all. In 1890 he was elected city treasurer by a large majority, and has continuously held the office since, being each successive year elected without opposition. During the incumbency of John Eddings as Postmaster of Vancouver, 11 years, W.H. Eddings was his assistant, and afterwards spent five years in the employ of the government at the barracks. He leaves behind him in the home left desolate, a widow and one daughter, who will miss the ministrations of a good husband and kind father.

The funeral will be held at the family residence tomorrow, Friday, at 2 o'clock p.m. The ceremonies will be under the auspices of the Masonic order, of which he was a blue lodge member. He was also a member of the society of Chosen Friends. The interment will take place in the Masonic cemetery.

ADVENTUROUS LIFE ENDED Jacob Duback, Mexican War Veteran and Clark County Pioneer, Dies.

Jacob Duback, Sr., one of the oldest pioneers and Mexican War Veterans of Clark County, died at his home near Vancouver, Wash., on January 27, 1904, at 2:45 P.M. Mr. Duback was born in Baden, Germany, January 22, 1822, and resided there until 1846, at which time he emigrated to the United States and settled in Buffalo, where he resided until the breaking out of the Mexican War. He then enlisted in the Army and in 1847 accompanied the Tenth United States Infantry to the scene of hostilities by way of Texas, Rio Grande and Matamoras.

He was with General Taylor's command all through the war. He saw much active service, being in the famous battle of Buena Vista. After the war, he returned to the East and re-enlisted in the regular Army, Third Artillery, Company H. The company was ordered to Florida by boat, which was partially wrecked off the North Carolina coast, but after many hardships the company succeeded in reaching Florida. Mr. Duback was a party to the capture of the famous "Billy Bowlegs", an Indian who is well known in the Florida war.

Mr. Duback then returned to Rhode Island with his company, where he married Miss Dorothea Sauer on November 9, 1853, at Newport, R.I., and in the latter part of 1853, or early in 1854, the company was ordered to California by way of the Horn on the steamship San Francisco, Mr. Duback taking his bride with him. The steamer was wrecked just outside of New York harbor, and of 1100 people that went aboard, only 800 survived. For several days the craft was tossed about as a helpless derelict. The 800 were picked up by a passing steamer more dead than alive and taken back to New York.

After returning to New York, they made the trip to California by wagon, and passed the Winter of 1854 and 1855 under the command of General Steptoe. After spending two months in quarters at Benecia, he was transferred to Fort Orford and took part in the Rogue River War, where he helped to capture Chief John of that tribe. Eighteen months later he was sent to Umpqua and subsequently returned to California, where he received his discharge at Benecia, October 9, 1858. He then came north to Fort Vancouver, which was a post of the Hudson's Bay Company.

He had saved up a small amount of money while working for Uncle Sam, and bought a 160-acre farm and a yoke of oxen.

By steady work and economy and the help of his thrifty wife, he has risen to be among the most influential and wealthy men of Clark County. In December, 1877, he bought a farm on the south side of Mill Plain, where he built a comfortable residence in which he lived until his death.

This is the first death in the family of 12 children and 18 grandchildren. Mrs. Duback is 68 years old and quite hale. Those of the children that reside in Portland are: Mrs. L.A. Bailey, Mrs. May D. Bybee, Mrs. Matthew Steele, and Jacob Duback Jr.; Francis V. Duback of San Francisco; Mrs. J. A. Brown of Wellington, Wash, and Frederick, Charles P., Nicholas J., Joseph Henry, Edwin R. and Ray Duback, all living on their farms near their father's home. The funeral will take place from the residence on Saturday at 10 o'clock and services will be held at the Vancouver cemetery, East Vancouver, at 1:30 P.M.

Jacob Duback

One of the early pioneers on Mill Plain in Clark County, Jacob Duback was born in Unterberlin, Baden, Germany on January 22, 1822. The youngest in a family of five children, he was the son of Fritz Duback and Catherina Burnside. The family name was originally Tuback but was changed to Duback around 1846. Jacob received his schooling in Germany, and in 1846 he set sail on a five masted sailing ship to the United States, landing in Buffalo, New York.

Dorothea Sauer became his bride on October 9, 1853 at Newport, Rhode Island. The daughter of Jacob and Mary Ann Sauer, she was born February 26, 1839 in Worstburg, Bavaria, Germany. Her family emigrated to the United States when Dorothea was a little girl, leaving her behind in Germany. When she was fifteen years old she joined them at Ft. Adams, Newport, Rhode Island, where her father was Band Master in the Third Artillery. This is where she met handsome young Jacob Duback. She had arrived in June of 1853 and they were married in October.

At the onset of the Mexican War, Jacob enlisted in the Tenth U. S. Infantry. He saw a great deal of active service under the command of General Taylor. After the halt of the hostilities he returned to the United States and re-enlisted in the Third U. S. Artillery. On Christmas Eve, 1853, his regiment left New York aboard the steamer San Francisco, bound for California. Just out of Sandy Hood at midnight that night, they met with disaster. A severe storm struck and the steamer was wrecked. Three hundred people were swept overboard from the hurricane deck, none were saved. Although the ship was badly damaged it remained afloat, and for several days it was unknown who had survived and who had drowned. People were cut off from the food supply and went hungry for days before the men were able to break through wreckage and break open the doors of the store rooms. Cholera broke out among the passengers and as they died by the score, they were thrown overboard. There was no way to communi-cate their distress except by firing the ships guns, and it was two weeks before help came along. The Three Bells, bound from Liverpool to New York, remained for three days, taking some of the passengers off the wreck. A week later, the Kilby, bound for Boston, took on another group of people. Then within a few days, the Antarctic arrived, sailing from New York to Liverpool and took the last of them aboard. By this time only 300 of the 1,100 originally on board were left to tell the tale. Jacob and his wife Dorothea were among the survivors. They had to continue on to Liverpool and then return to New York. No one minded, they were only too happy to be rescued off the wrecked ship.

Jacob and Dorothy were among those picked up by the Three Bells. Rations were shortened because of the additional passengers and near the end of the journey it got down to one cracker and a gill of water per day. On January 22 they arrived in New York and were sent from there to Govern-ment Island where they remained until April 1 when they left for Ft. Leavenworth, Kansas. Traveling overland partly by train and partly by boat up the Mississippi River, they remained there until May fitting the group out for the overland excursion with wagons, teams, bedding and provisions.

From this point the group went overland under the command of General Stepner and spent the winter of 1855 at Salt

Obituaries for burials in the Old City Cemetery in Vancouver, WA

Lake City, Utah. The following spring they resumed their journey and traveled on to Sacramento, California meeting many bands of Indians along the way.

A veteran of ten years in the regular Army, Jacob also took part in the Rogue River Indian Wars in Oregon. His first son, Francis, was born while Jacob was serving in Company "H" of the Third U. S. Artillery at Port Orford, the first white child born there. They were also stationed at Ft. Umpqua for eighteen months before returning to San Diego, California. Dorothea's parents came west to California and she traveled to Benicia to meet them. Jacob received a furlough and left the regiment at San Pedro, coming to Benicia where he was discharged on October 9, 1858.

In 1858, he came to Ft. Vancouver and settled at East Mill Plain on a 517 acre farm, where he planted an orchard of various kinds of fruit trees. An ardent supporter of education, Jacob served as school director for nine years. The family were members of St. Luke's Episcopal Church in Vancouver.

After an illness of two months, Jacob died January 27, 1904. His funeral was held at the family home. Dorothea passed away on October 27, 1917. They are both buried in Old City Cemetery in Vancouver.

DROWNED

Two of Vancouver's promising young men are drowned near the old Match Factory.

On last Thursday evening occurred another of those sad drownings in the treacherous Columbia. The victims of this accident are two of Vancouver's best young lads. Ralph Criss and Ralph Gillihan. The former is the son of C.A. Criss and the latter is the son of Thomas Gillihan. The boys were of the same age and were great chums. Young Criss had gone out to the home of Mr. Gillihan near the old match factory and the boys then went for a swim in the river. Chriss waded out a little too far and stepped off a ledge in the tank where the river had out it almost perpendicular. His chum went to his assistance and he too stepped into the deep water. The boys grappled with each other and soon sank. Criss could not swim at all and Gillihan but little. Another young lad tried to help the boys. They clutched him and he came near being taken down with them. Assistance came at once and every effort was made to find the bodies. Sheriff Blesecker and chief of police Bateman took charge of the search. The river was dragged with grappling hooks and many charges of dynamite were set off. The work was continued all night long and just before noon Friday the body of Criss was recovered. Every effort has been made since then to get the body of Gillihan but without avail. On Tuesday they had his body up to the surface of the water but owing to his having but scant clothing the grappling hool would not hold. The body rolled back and sunk and all efforts to raise it since then have been unavailing. The funeral of the Criss lad was held Sunday under the auspices of the Woodmen of the World. The parents of the boys are prostrated with grief and the sympathy of all is with them in their hour of trial and bereavement.

DEATH CLAIMS LOCAL PIONEER

A man who knew intimately Clark county's erstwhile wilderness – Oscar McBride of Rock creek – is dead. Oscar, 79, died yesterday at St. Joseph's hospital. Virtually blind but undaunted, he had remained active despite failing health until his death.

For 73 of his 79 years he had lived in this county. Born Nov. 6, 1869, in Missouri, he grew up from early childhood in Clark county and later homesteaded on Rock creek, tributary of the east fork of the Lewis river, in the legendary Dole valley country.

Woodsman and sportsman by nature, he acquired extensive and intimate knowledge of the county's woods, streams and lakes upon memories of which he drew often in recent years. McBrides Meanderings, read widely by Columbian subscribers, was a column drawn from the experiences of his woodsman's life. Almost on the day he died, he had been planning a new series of reminiscences.

His address at the time of his death was 810 W. Twenty-sixth st., Vancouver.

Besides teaching in Clark county for many years, McBride also served two terms as Clark County Superintendent of Schools.

McBride is survived by a daughter, Miss Lucille McBride of Vancouver, and a sister, Mrs. Alberta Christy of Portland.

Funeral services, at Knapp's chapel, will be at 1 p.m. Thursday. Interment will be in the City cemetery.
