

Lewis County. In 1845 the Provisional Government of Oregon divided the District of Vancouver into two large counties: all land north of the Columbia and west of the Cowlitz Rivers was designated Lewis County. It was named after the explorer, Meriwether Lewis. Today the county has been reduced in size and ranks sixth in area among the state's counties. It is located in the southwestern part of the state and stretches from the summit of the Cascade Mountains on the east to Pacific County on the west. The county's early settlers expended much effort and time in cutting and building roads through the vast forests that covered the land. In 1873 the Northern Pacific Railroad passed through the county linking it to the Puget Sound settlements; the county seat, Chehalis, was built to accommodate the new railroad. Today, the county has a varied economy based on wood products, manufacturing, food processing and agriculture.

Bounded by: Grays Harbor and Thurston counties (N), Yakima County (E), Skamania, Cowlitz, and Wahkiakum counties (S), and Pacific County (W).

County Seat: Jackson Prairie (1845?-1862), Claquato (1862-1872) and Chehalis (originally Saundersville, renamed Chehalis in 1872), 1873 - present.
