

Snohomish County was established in 1861 and was once part of Island County. The county stretches from Puget Sound on the west to the crest of the Cascade Mountains on the east. The county was first explored in 1792 when Captain George Vancouver named the region New Georgia; he also named Port Susan and Port Gardner Bay. The vast stands of timber attracted settlers who set up mills and provided timber to build San Francisco and the transcontinental railroads in the mid-nineteenth century. Today, Snohomish County is the third most populous county in Washington and enjoys a varied economy based on wood products, aircraft manufacturing and agriculture.

Bounded by: Skagit County (N), Chelan County (E), King County (S), and Puget Sound (W).

County Seat: Mukilteo (1861), Snohomish (originally founded as Snohomish City) (1861-1894), and Everett (originally founded as Port Gardner), 1894-present.
