Foreword

The contents of this volume contain the inscriptions and locations of all the known cemeteries in Epsom, N.H. Many graves are unmarked, some have field stones and as the years have passed, time has erased the inscriptions on many of the others. There were only two which had been destroyed, one to make a field and the other to make room to build a hen house.

I am greatly indebted to Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Nelson, who made out many trips into the country a pleasure, and who, by their assistance, made it possible to complete these inscriptions of the twenty-two cemeteries in a few weeks.

I am also indebted to Mr. Arthur Wells of Epsom, for taking us to the more remote cemeteries, which we could not possibly have found without his assistance.

Evelyn Piper Rowell

Included in this record is an old cemetery at the end of the road from Wells Corner, New Rye to the Allenstown line, as this family is closely allied with the families buried in the No. 17, Brown-Davis Cemetery, and there are a few Allenstown cemeteries copied.

Nos. 23, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8 were copied by the Epsom Woman's Club.

Note: 1997 - Corrections and omitted and/or missed inscriptions from the original have been added; individuals from Part II have been added to the alphabetical list of persons; and cemeteries 32 - 43 unlisted previously, have been added. 2003 added maiden names of several spouses.

PART III

JONATHAN DOLBEER BOOK

Jonathan Dolbeer was born in Rye, N.H. in 1773 and later moved with his family to the New Rye part of Epsom. For many years he was the clerk of the Epsom Congregational Church, and as such kept a record of deaths in the town. Upon his death in 1857, his nephew Calvin Dolbeer continued to record deaths in the town. The book covers the years from 1819 through 1874 and is mentioned in the history of Epsom's early settlers by John Mark Moses. The original was donated to the Epsom Historical Society and it remains in their care. Original spellings were copied, words in italics were not clear, items in parenthesis have been added through more recent research.
