Introduction

This book describes a group of families who left the village of Wiesental, Baden in Germany in the second half of the 19th century, migrated to America, and settled in the area around Springville.

The 19th century was a difficult period for most people in Germany. Good farming land was in short supply and wars continually ravaged the land. For most of the century, Germany was not yet a united country but a loose collection of small independent states formed after the breakup of the Holy Roman Empire. Baden was a grand duchy ruled by a grand duke, and was caught in the middle of power struggles between France, Prussia, and Austria. There were revolutions in 1848, the Austro-Prussian War in 1866, and the Franco-Prussian War in 1870.

Many people wanted to escape the troubles in Germany and thought of America as a place with more opportunity. There was a major emigration from Germany to America between about 1850 and 1900. But when the new immigrants settled in America, they did not cut off all contact with their families back in Germany. Many letters were exchanged and there were occasional visits across the ocean. If the immigrants found favorable conditions in America, they encouraged their friends and relatives to join them and the new immigrants often settled in the same areas. Thus over the years, many people from one village or area in Germany would end up partially reconstructing their family and village in America.

One such concentration occurred when families from Wiesental, Baden settled around Springville and the neighboring village of West Valley, New York. Between 1850 and 1900, over 100 people from Wiesental made the journey. The family names are familiar even today in both Wiesental and Springville – Brühmüller (Bremiller), Gentner, Heiler, Knebel, Mahl, Reuter (Rider), Salzler, Scharf, Schuhmacher (Schumacher), Schweickert, Seider, and others. This book is dedicated to the memory of these families.

How To Use This Book

Some of the conventions used in this book may be unfamiliar. This introduction explains how the book is organized and how to use the different sections.

The main part of this book is the Family Listings section. Each family has an identifier – “F” followed by a number, for example “F123”, and the families are listed in numerical order. To find someone’s family, look up their family identifier in the Index at the back of the book and then find their family in the Family Listings section.

Next, let’s take a look at how a name is shown. Here is a typical full name:

Helen Josephine “Josie” Brooks {Gamel} (1879-1946) [209] :667,p38

This woman’s maiden name was Helen Josephine Brooks. Nick names or commonly used names, such as Josie, are surrounded by quotation marks. Adopted names, such as Gamel, are shown in curly brackets. A woman’s married name is the most common type of adopted name, but there are other types of adopted names, for example when a person adopts a new name upon entering a religious order or changes the spelling of their family name.

The name is normally followed by the life span in parentheses. In this case Helen was born in 1879 and died in 1946. Sometimes, instead of a death date you will see the letter D (for example, 1853-D), meaning that the person is dead but the date is unknown. People who are not known to be dead are just listed as male or female, for example “Female (Living in 1999)”. In order to protect their privacy, families are listed in this book only if both parents have died.

In addition, there is sometimes a personal number shown in square brackets after the life span. Helen’s personal number is 209. This personal number is like a social security number, and uniquely identifies a person within the family tree, even if they have the same name as someone else. For example, we have a lot of men named John Winter in my family, but you can tell them apart because they all have different personal numbers.

Sources

The family listings include references to the sources for each piece of information. These source references are at the end of a line and always begin with a colon (:). In the example with Helen Brooks {Gamel} above, the information came from page 38 of source 667 (the baptism records of St. Mary’s church in New Oregon, NY). Occasionally two or more sources are listed for a fact. For example :43:503,p22 indicates that the information came from source 43 and page 22 of source 503. The main source for a family is shown at the beginning of the listing, after the identifier. The main source for an individual is shown after their name. Any information that does not come from the main source has a separate source number, shown right after that information. Look up the source number in the Sources section to see where the information came from.

Acknowledgments

One of the great pleasures of genealogy is its social nature. Genealogists are naturally interested in people and usually generous in sharing their research with others. Literally hundreds of people have contributed to this book and they are listed in the sources at the end of the book. However, I particularly want to thank some people who were especially helpful with the genealogies in this book.

Mabel Wineford Leibinger compiled several genealogy booklets on the American branches of the families who came from Wiesental. Her Amann Family Tree, published in 1966, was the book that originally inspired me and others to get involved with genealogy and family history. She also published the Mahl Family Tree in 1965 and the Salzler Family Tree in 1981.

John Emerling updated the Amann Family Tree in 1994, to chronicle the family tree's expansion.

Dorothy Willover wrote the Schweickert Family Tree, published in 1982 and revised in 1997.

Mike McNally provided a lot of information and some great photos of the Seider family.

The many other people who contributed to this genealogy are listed in the Sources section.

Beyond This Book

You are welcome to copy any information in this book for your own personal, noncommercial purposes. However, you must secure permission of the author before using any of this information for commercial purposes.

Although I have tried to make this material as accurate as possible, there are undoubtedly errors remaining. Try to independently verify any crucial facts before using them as the basis for your own genealogical research. I would be very grateful for any help or comments on this book. Copies of photographs of these people would be especially welcome and I am happy to share the photographs I have. # Wiesental, Baden-Württemberg, Germany

Wiesental is a small village of 8500 people in southwestern Germany, in the state of Baden-Württemberg, about 20 miles north of Karlsruhe. The map on the left gives a general sense of where Wiesental is located within Germany. In 1975, the neighboring villages of Waghäusel, Kirrlach, and Wiesental banded together into the community of Waghäusel, so Wiesental is now properly called Waghäusel-Wiesental. The crest of Wiesental is shown to the right.

In the 1800s, Wiesental was part of the Grand Duchy of Baden. This was a difficult time and wars raged across central Europe almost continually. Many people decided to leave their ancestral home and emigrate to South America, Australia, and especially to the United States. In the 1850s, several families left Wiesental and settled in the area around Springville, my home town. They must have liked what they found there, because they were followed by many others. I know of over 100 people who emigrated from Wiesental and settled near Springville and the neighboring village of West Valley between 1850 and 1900. These families are described in this genealogy. The emigrants from Wiesental to the Springville area include the Amann, Bremiller, Dahm, Eichenberger, Gentner, Heft, Heiler, Knebel, Mahl, Metzger, Reuter (Rider), Salzler, Scharf, Schumacher, Schweickert, and Seider families.

After the Reformation, German villages tended to be either Catholic or Protestant (Lutheran). Wiesental was a Catholic village. Most of my genealogical research on the families of Wiesental has been based on the records from St. Jodokus Roman Catholic church in Wiesental, shown above. This was the parish church for the people who emigrated to the Springville area. For anyone who may wish to pursue this research, Wiesental church records covering the period from the early 1700s to the early 1900s are available on microfilm through the LDS (Mormon) library in Salt Lake City.

Wiesental was founded in 1297. The parade shown above was part of the festival celebrating Wiesental's 700th anniversary in July 1997.

Springville, New York, USA

Springville is a small village in southwestern New York State, about 30 miles south of Buffalo. About 4,000 people live in Springville. It also serves as the commercial center for the surrounding rural farming and residential areas. In the late 1800s, many families emigrated from Wiesental, Germany and settled on the rich farmland and rolling hills around Springville, which somewhat resemble the landscape near Wiesental.

Farmland near Springville.

Children learn about snakes at an exhibit at the annual Springville Dairy Festival. There are many dairy farms in the Springville area.

A typical house in Springville. This was the home of Sophia Amman Gentner, who was born in Wiesental in 1846 and came to America with her husband Karl Gentner in 1873 (see family F4).

The Immigrants

Over 100 people are known to have emigrated from Wiesental, Baden to the area around Springville and West Valley, New York. The known emigrants are shown below, along with family identifiers for people who came as family groups.

of being struck by lightning while working on the farm
Buried in Maplewood cemetery, Springville

At one o'clock in the afternoon, William started his team for the hay field to finish haying. When he had about half a load, it began thundering and lightning. A bolt struck him and ran the whole length of his body, tearing off both his boots and killing him instantly. It also killed his dog, a few feet from the wagon. His brother, who was loading the wagon, escaped injury.
