Mrs. Anne Sheriff, the Schoolwide Enrichment Program teacher, participated in a University of South Carolina summer course sponsored by the South Carolina Department of Archives and History and the Social Studies Division of the South Carolina Education Department. In the class the students were required to research original sources and write lesson plans using documents on a subject of interest to South Carolinians.

Mrs. Robyn Copp, the instructor, had previously published research packets on Jehu Jones, a black merchant, from Charleston and related many sources on black history. She located obscured documents on blacks in local districts for use by several students. Mrs. Margaret Waldron, Social Studies Consultant from the State Department of Education, convinced students that there was a need for more black history in our local schools. Through their help and the excitement of several students in the class, the black history project slowly emerged. Many hours were spent in the Archives and the South Caroliniana Library researching black history in upstate South Carolina.

Mrs. Sheriff decided to concentrate on original documents concerning Pickens County black people. Very little work had been done on the black population of northwestern South Carolina, the sole exception being the research pursued by Dr. W. J. Megginson on Pendleton, Seneca, Clemson and Central's black culture and heritage.

Two years ago the Pickens County School District Gifted Program instituted the Schoolwide Enrichment Model into their gifted classes. This year seven students indicated they were interested in a Black History Class to be held once-a-week in the Quest classroom. These students read about famous blacks, visited a exhibit on Jane Hunter at the Pendleton Historical Commission, and toured Kings Chapel African Methodist Episcopal Church where Mrs. Vance Robinson explained its history and importance. The students deciphered original school documents concerning certification of black teachers. These documents are part of the Pickens County School records.

This publication is the result of that interest and research.
